

Marques Colston

BIO — MEDIUM

Marques Colston is an operator and strategist who has worked both sides of the business of sports, often at the same time. While playing ten seasons for the New Orleans Saints, he owned and ran the Harrisburg Stampede to a championship, and went on to own the Philadelphia Soul. He has advised the NFL Players Association and NFL Players Inc., developed Columbia Business School's executive education program Venture Investing for Professional Athletes, and taught Leadership and Entrepreneurship at the University of New Orleans. He is a former investment adviser, held Series 7 and 66, and today is Managing Partner of Champion Capital. He delivers keynotes and workshops, advises sports organizations, and coaches a small number of leaders.
